Paul Burke

Paul is an English/Irish writer born in London.

He began his career as a van driver in an advertising agency but went on to become a hugely successful copywriter. He's written some of the nation's best-loved TV commercials and won practically every award the industry has to offer.

For writing and directing radio ads, he won so many awards that he was presented with a Radio Advertising Fellowship at The House of Lords.

He has also published four critically acclaimed novels and countless pieces of journalism.

More recently, he has turned to screenwriting, adapting two of his books for film. Both are now in development.

Paul can write practically anything. Good job too because, by his own admission, he's absolutely useless at everything else.
